Charitie.

The beams of morning are new'd
The valley laughs their light to see;
And earth is bright with gratitude,
And heaven with Charitie.

Oh, dew of heaven; oh, light of earth!
Fain would our hearts be fill'd with thee,
Because no darkness comes, no dearth,
About the home of Charitie.

God guides the stars their wandering way,
He seems to cast their courses free,
But birds unto himself for aye;
And all their charms are Charitie.

When first he stretch'd the signed zone,
And heap'd the hills, and barr'd the sea,
Then Wisdom sat beside his throne,
But his own word was Charitie.

And still, through every age and hour,
Of things that were and things that be,
Are breathed the presence and the power
Of everlasting Charitie.

By noon and night, by sun and shower,
By dew that fall and winds that flee,
On grove and field, on fold and flower,
Is shed the peace of Charitie.

The violets light the lonely hill,
The fruitful furrows load the lea;
Man's heart alone is sterile still,
For lack of love to Charitie.

He walks a weary vale within—
No lamp of love in heart hath he;
His steps are death, his thoughts are sin,
For lack of gentle Charitie.

Daughter of heaven! we dare not lift
The dimness of our eyes to thee;
Oh! pure and God-descended gift!
Oh! spotless, perfect Charitie!

Yet forasmuch thy brow is crest
With blood-drops from the deathful tree,
We take thee for our only trust,
Oh! dying Charitie!

Ah! Hope, Endurance, Faith—ye fail like death,
But Love an everlasting gown receiveth;
For she is Hope, and Fortitude, and Faith,
Who all things hopeeth, heareth and believeth.

—JOHN RUSKIN.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE BROOKLYN MAGAZINE.—A splendid array of light, brief, and seasonable articles is offered in the August Brooklyn Magazine, and makes a number especially adapted for summer reading. "Hamlet's City," by Hon. W. J. Armstrong, takes us in the most interesting fashion through the scenes of Shakespeare's drama in the quaint town of Elsinore, Denmark, and conducts us down into the lower dungeons of Kronborg Castle, disclosing the blood-curdling horrors of those famous subterranean vaults. One step, and we are situated delightfully at an American farm-house, through Mrs. Sophie L. Schenck's story of "Friend Max." Who can be a young New York lawyer in the disguise of a farmer. Another step, and we are with Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher in Liverpool listening to Gladstone's great Home-Rule speech through the first of a series of personal letters from England by the Plymouth pastor's wife describing her travels. Again, and we are "In a Hindu Crematory," at Calcutta, India. And so, one is shifted in kaleidoscopic fashion from one part of the world to another in the pages of this bright magazine. Nearly all the thirty and odd articles and poems given have the breath of summer about their titles or text, and by their crispness and number offer a delightful variety of reading matter. Besides these are also the English sermons thus far delivered by Mr. Beecher across the water, and the out-of-town sermons of Dr. Talmage, revised by themselves, making in all a remarkable literary feast at the still more remarkable modest price of 20 cents. $2 per year. The Brooklyn Magazine, 7 Murray street, New York.

CEKVANTER.—Of him there is not so much as an authentic likeness, and we can only guess at his appearance from an account which he has given of it in the preface of his novels. We find a few notices of his personal adventures let fall in his books, as if by accident, but nothing which can be woven into any distinct narrative. We learn from him that he had been a soldier, that he was at the battle of Lepanto and lost the use of his left arm there; that he was a captive among the Moors at Algiers; that he wrote plays; that he was once in a prison in Spain, and that he wrote part of "Don Quixote" there, but of what brought him into that condition we are told nothing. We learn that he was poor, that in his later years he was assisted and patronized by the Conde de Lemos and by the Archbishop of Toledo. We see also that he was a loyal and true gentleman, devoted to his King and country, a Spaniard to the heart, a pious Catholic, as fully persuaded as the rest of his nation of the wisdom and justice of Philip's wars in the Low Countries. Out of these few facts, however, nothing of a personal history could be constructed which could do more than invite curiosity—while the literary contemporaries of Cervantes, like most of Shakespeare's contemporaries, were too little conscious of the relative importance of the author of "Don Quixote" and themselves to have preserved any further details of him. This last deficiency is not perhaps to be regretted. Their contributions, if they had given us any, would probably have consisted of ill-natured and mythical anecdotes, which would have been worse than silence. But, owing to these causes, the biographies of Cervantes have hitherto been extremely meagre. We have a distinct account of his capacity at Algiers. He was too modest to say much about it himself, but the story of his singularly gallant and chivalrous behavior was the subject of an official inquiry, and the story remains indestructible in authentic depositions. For the rest we have been left to the dates of his different works to learn how he was employed and to a few notices of strangers who had been led by his European fame to make inquiries about him. On the whole, the impression has been that he was an honest gentleman, and much ill-used by fortune: that he was to the end poor and neglected, and was another instance of the world's indifference to its best men until they are dead and nothing can be done for them. Much of this remains true, but only true we are glad to find, with considerable qualifications. —Quarterly Review.

JOHN BUNYAN.—Nearly all that we know of Bunyan, Bunyan has told himself. Our chief cause of regret is that he should have been so provokingly sparing of details of time and place, and that his vivid autobiography should have ended so soon, leaving so large and important a portion of his life, including the greater part of his twelve years' imprisonment and the period between his release in 1672 and his death in 1688, little more than a blank to us. The church-books of Bedford Meeting, kept by Bunyan after he became its pastor, do something to fill up this blank. We find him here recording the "miscarriages" of certain brothers and sisters—Oliver Thodye in "breaking the Sabbath and braving with neighbours;" John Stanton in "abusing his wife and beating her often for very light matters;" with a note that "hee promised us reformation, and seemed sorry for his fault;" Sister Landy in "countenancing card-playing and deceiving the Church with her former seeming repentance;" and, worst of all, of John Rust, who was drunk after so "very beastly and filthy a manner" that it needed three men to carry him home from the scene of his debauch; at the Swan, and the like; together with the more pleasing notices of the reception of new members, such as the desire of "Sister Behemont"—an odd way of spelling Beaumont—"to walke in fellowship with us," and the appointment of days of fasting and prayer "for our children and relatives." Yet the materials are but scanty. The books were irregularly kept through stress of persecution, and though they gave a not altogether edifying, though instructive insight into the internal history of the church over which he presided, they add nothing to our knowledge of the man or the circumstances of his life. It is unlikely that much if anything more will ever be known of one of the most striking personalities in English literature.

THE 47th Annual Catalogue of Pennington Seminary, Pennington, New Jersey, Thos. Hanlon, D. D. President, is just received. This boarding school for both sexes, now before the public for nearly fifty years, ranks very high. The testimonials of such educators as Dr. McCosh and numerous others, as found in this catalogue, are full of proof of this. Parents seeking a higher education for their children under the best kind of influences, would do well to address Dr. Hanlon, Pennington, New Jersey, for a catalogue

MIDSUMMER BLANKET SALE.

W. V. SNYDER & CO. Invite the attention of Hotel Proprietors and Housekeepers to their Annual Midsummer Blanket Sale.

The prices quoted at this offering will undoubtedly rule lower than the rates in October and November, when the purchase of Blankets becomes a necessity. This sale will include various grades, both higher and lower in price than mentioned below; but particular attention is called to the following

Twelve Lots AS BEING ESPECIALLY CHEAP AND DESIRABLE:

- Lot 1, White, 10-4, at $3.50 per pair.
- Lot 2, White, 11-4, at $4.50 per pair.
- Lot 3, White, 12-4, at $5.25 per pair.
- Lot 4, White, 13-4, at $6.00 per pair.
- Lot 5, White, 10-4, All-Wool, $3.75 pair.
- Lot 6, White, 11-4, All-Wool, $5.50 pair.
- Lot 7, White, 12-4, All-Wool, $6.50 pair.
- Lot 8, White, 11-4, All-Wool, $6.50 pair.
- Lot 9, White, 12-4, All-Wool, $7.50 pair.
- Lot 10, Red, 11-4, $4.75 per pair.
- Lot 11, Red, 11-4, $5.50 per pair.
- Lot 12, Red, 12-4, $6.50 per pair.

We have made a large purchase of these Blankets, and hope to have enough to supply the demand, and probably will unless the extremely Low Prices at which they are offered induces some of our Competitors to become our Customers.

THE BEEHIVE

OF L. S. PLAUT & CO. NEWARK, N. J.

Announcement Extraordinary

The attention of the public of New Jersey is respectfully called to the great

BEE HIVE ALTERATION SALE

which was inaugurated on Tuesday morning, July 13th, with the greatest slaughter of price ever heard of in this State.

$250,000.00

over a quarter of a million dollars' worth of Fancy Goods, Fancy Dry Goods, Men's Furnishings, Ladies', Children's, Boys' & Youths' Shoes, etc., offered during this great sale

At a Great Sacrifice.

The Bee Hive is to be remodelled and greatly enlarged, and these improvements are absolutely necessary by its enormously increased business. Its present large capacity having been completely out-grown, and now for the third time in its existence it is to be more than doubled in size.

It is plain to all that to make these great changes we must reduce our immense stock of goods to the smallest possible proportions. This can only be done in one way, and to accomplish this reduction, prices have been placed averaging fully 25 per cent reduction and in many cases to one-half former value. When you consider for a moment that these reductions are made upon new merchandise of this seasons purchase, and not upon old stock, you can then realize that grand bargains are likely to be found during this great alteration sale.

Remember that this is our extremity and your opportunity, and no such bona fide sacrifice has ever been made in Newark before, and not likely to be done again in many years. People from a distance will save more than enough to compensate them for expenses and trouble by visiting this great sale. The most careful attention will be paid to filling orders by mail, and customers can rest assured they will get just what they order and just what is advertised.

This Great Sale is now in Progress.
